Building Permits fees are an indicator of how the local economy is doing and they tend to be stronger during the spring and summer months as that is the best weather to perform work on your home.

The trend is on the rise for building permit fees as we have doubled our permit fees over the same time period from last year, a sign that the local economy is indeed strong.

The number of building permits is on the rise as we are up over 150 building permits from the last year. This again is a sign that the local economy is doing well and goes hand in hand with the increased construction and redevelopment that we are seeing on Route 53.

The trend is on the rise for building permits, but while we have a seen a drastic increase in permit fees, the total number of building permits issued increase will be less as we are seeing larger projects with large fees.

Total inspections are on the rise as we see an increase in permits issued. As we have two large residential projects going on the demand on our inspectors is at an all-time high, but we are up to and meeting the demand.

The trend for inspections from all of our disciplines is on the rise as we issue more permits for larger projects. We are also seeing more inspections/site visits with homeowners and builders as properties are redeveloped.
